

Universities in Europe and Asia must collaborate, say rectors

Yojana Sharma 28 September 2012 - Universities in Europe and Asia must collaborate to make their graduates employable in a globalised world, with joint programmes and dual degrees paving the way for greater student mobility, heads of universities in 37 Asian and European countries heard at a major conference in The Netherlands this week.

Although some joint degrees exist between European and Asian universities, Karsten Warnecke, deputy executive director of the Singapore-based Europe Asia Foundation, said there were eight times more Asian students going to Europe than European students going to Asia.

Read More on University World News

<http://www.universityworldnews.com/article.php?story=20120928130234100>