Session 1: Presentation of main outcomes and key issues of the background report: “Examining Existing Police Oversight Mechanisms in Asia and Europe”

Two researchers were commissioned to draft a background report to provide participants with up-to-date independently-gathered and comprehensive material on existing police oversight mechanisms in Asia and Europe. The purpose of this report is to establish a common ground for participants and to stimulate discussions at the workshop. This session will highlight the main outcomes of the report. The discussant is invited to critique the report by commenting on positive trends identified as well as raising possible gaps in the information and other questions for debate.

Police and Community Partnerships
This session will examine the public standing of the police both in Asia and Europe; compare best practices in good communication with the community and examples of working together for common interest focusing on the following aspects:

Community Policing
Community policing has been proven effective to increase public safety through the strengthened ties between the community and the police department.

Community Mobilisation
Community-based crime prevention programs are also the foundation of an effective community policing model. The challenge faced by most police agencies is developing and sustaining these partnerships.

Community Policing in a Multiethnic Society
Asia’s and Europe’s population is in many cases multi-ethnic in composition through migration. Therefore the relation between the police and multi-ethnic societies has to be strengthened to prevent discrimination against minorities on one hand and to increase the operational effectiveness of police on the other hand.
