Overview of the 9th ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium

The 9th ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium, “Media and the Green Agenda: Reporting on Sustainable Development in Asia and Europe”, will focus on the challenges for the media in reporting on sustainable development, in particular the looming expiry of the MDGs in 2015 and its intended successor, Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), as well as the areas of energy, green growth and economy, and poverty reduction.

Colloquium participants will discuss how these issues are viewed in different countries across Asia and Europe, how they are reported in the media, and explore the role of the media in bringing the stories to an interested and wider public.

The Colloquium will be held in conjunction with the upcoming 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers’ Meeting to be held from 11-12 November 2013 in New Delhi, India.
Guiding Principles

The Asia-Europe Foundation (ASEF)’s objective for the Colloquium is to enable an open and candid discussion on the given subject. We wish to promote mutual understanding among journalists and other media practitioners from Asia and Europe.

The main sessions will be held as closed-door proceedings, where participants may speak their minds freely as individuals, not in any official capacity. We have invited you through a selection process. We value your views and want you to participate actively, please speak up freely.

To facilitate a frank discussion, Chatham House rules apply to all sessions of Day 1 and Day 2.
About the ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium

The ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium, which was first held in 1998, gathers top practising and experienced journalists and experts from Asia and Europe for a closed-door, informal meeting to discuss important issues of common concern and its related media challenges.

The Colloquium offers an opportunity for journalists to come together to share their experiences and perspectives as media professionals from national and regional levels in a direct exchange with their regional counterparts. Journalists will get to discuss their work on specific thematic issues, such as sustainable development and environment, economy and society, and other themes aligned with the ASEM agenda.

The ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium is organised in conjunction with the ASEM Foreign Ministers’ Meetings, held every two years alternating between Asia and Europe.

In 2013, the ASEF Journalists’ Colloquium programme was merged with the Asia-Europe Journalists’ Seminar, which broadens the diversity of participants and enriches the existing Colloquium format.

Bangladesh

SAIFUL Islam is an award-winning health journalist from Bangladesh and has been working for the BSS News Agency for over a decade-and-half. With his two Masters degrees in public health and philosophy, he has dedicated his career to covering science, development, economic and social issues. He is a co-founder of the Health and Environment Journalist Forum in Bangladesh and is now an elected executive of the National Press Club. Saiful has made it a personal priority to advocate for important issues that contribute to the qualitative development of journalism. He is a passionate follower of the world’s latest thoughts on development and sustainability. He is also a great advocate to apply the positive power of media to expedite the development process in low income countries. Saiful is often invited for critical media inputs in international events and is hired for media and communication consultancies by the UN and other international agencies at home and beyond.

Ubaidillah bin MASLI
The Brunei Times
Brunei

Ubaidillah bin MASLI is a Senior Reporter for The Brunei Times. After spending much of his life abroad as a diplomat’s son, Ubai joined The Brunei Times newspaper at the age of 19. Having no journalistic background prior to joining, his assignments in Brunei exposed him to the inner workings of life in his home country.

Prominent among these experiences was coverage on environmental issues, which stirred an innate sense of responsibility towards the environment. Brunei has built up a reputation in environmental custodianship, being involved in the Heart of Borneo initiative and conserving much of its own forests.

However, a desire to find out how much of this reputation holds true has prompted him to pursue a Bachelor’s Degree in Environmental Studies, to complement the field experiences gained, and to ensure fair and truthful reporting.

Lucy WU Wencong has been covering environmental issues for two years for China Daily, one of China’s largest English language daily newspapers. She follows international trends in environmental issues, such as climate change and biodiversity conservation.

She graduated from the Fudan University with a Bachelor’s degree in Environmental Science and a second major in Journalism, followed by a Master’s degree in Social Policy and Planning from the London School of Economics in 2009.
Stefanos EVRIPIDOU
Cyprus Mail
Cyprus

Stefanos EVRIPIDOU is chief reporter at the English-language national newspaper, Cyprus Mail, where he covers, amongst other issues, political, international and economic affairs.

Having covered peace talks on the Cyprus conflict for over a decade, his recent focus has been on the impact of the economic crisis in Cyprus, the first country in the eurozone to see a haircut on bank deposits and the imposition of capital controls. He also closely monitors and writes on the geopolitical consequences of the exploration for natural gas in the Eastern Mediterranean.

In the last 11 years, he has won a number of journalism awards for his work covering asylum, migration and integration. His work has taken him across the globe reporting from Delhi to Istanbul, Dublin to Kosovo on a broad range of issues, and interviewing a wide range of people from hunger striking detained asylum seekers to presidents, foreign ministers, and diverse characters like Archbishop Desmond Tutu and the body double of Saddam Hussein’s notorious son Uday.
